

PRIVATE KILLED
BESIDE OFFICER
Lieutenant, Writing Man's Sister, Says He Was
"Good Pal"
TRIED TO HELP HIM
Five Soldiers Dead From Wounds and Disease in Today's Casualties

"It was in the fierce fighting along the Verdun front, and while I was standing beside him, a shell came and tore an awful gash in his breast. I escaped somehow and turned to help him, but he died before he could even speak. He was a good pal and he died like a man. There was no better man in the company. His grave is at Monte Savonno, near Gurbig. I well remember where we buried him."

Lieutenant Alfred Tatum wrote this to Miss Mary Farrell, 910 North Fifth street, Camden, in answer to inquiries about her brother, Private William F. Farrell. Although he was officially reported killed September 20, relatives had refused to believe that he was dead, and until the news came yesterday had clung to the hope that he might still be alive. James Sopotopoulos, a soldier chum, included a tribute to the dead man in Lieutenant Tatum's letter. He was standing near, he said, when the fatal shell came. Private Farrell was a member of Company H, 14th Infantry. He had been in France several months.

Report of Death Confirmed
Private George D. Davis, 745 Chalmers street, Camden, listed as dead three months ago, was not given up by relatives until yesterday, when they received an authentic report of his death from the War Department. He was only nineteen.

Private Davis enlisted in 1917 and after a short period of training went overseas with Company M, 112th Infantry. Davis was well known in Camden and for some time previous to enlistment had been employed at Cramps' shipyard. He was an orphan and had made his home with a brother.

Only 527 casualties are given out by the War Department today, and the major portion of these are corrections of previous reports. Of this number 117 are Pennsylvanians. Twenty-five are from this city.

Corrections Bring Sorrow
The long-promised corrections are coming out daily. Today they brought sad news to five families which had clung to the hope that their sons, previously reported missing, might turn up safely. Private Joseph T. Grimshel, 2281 North Fourth street; Frank T. Klotz, 712 Master street, and Harry T. Rodgers, 6248 Ogontz avenue, all previously reported missing, are listed as killed in action. Two other missing, Lieutenant Brooke Edwards, 2717 Locust street, and Private Charles Daly, 227 North Fifty-fourth street, are reported returned to duty after recovery from wounds.

Major Edgar Scott, of Lansdowne, and Sergeant Samuel L. Cassidy have died as a result of accident. Sergeant Cassidy was accidentally killed by a comrade in Belgium. The news was received a few days in a letter from a friend of Cassidy's by his parents, who live at 130 North Fifty-third street. The War Department has verified the report.

Cassidy was a member of Company B, 10th Field Artillery, and had served on the Mexican border with the Second Regiment, N. G. P. He trained nearly a year at a Georgia camp before sailing for overseas last July. He was well known as an athlete.

Five men formerly reported missing are now officially reported wounded, degree undetermined, and one as wounded slightly. Three are listed as victims of disease and two have died of wounds.

Private Harry Kaplan, 137 South Fifty-seventh street, reported missing in a September casualty list, was wounded and confined to a hospital during that month, according to the corrected report of today. Recent letters to a sister in this city also told of his wounds. He is twenty-four years old. He went to Camp Meade last May for intensive training and sailed for France after two months as a member of the 27th Infantry.

Private Charles A. Daily, originally reported missing since September 29, is now reported to have been killed and buried in France. He was a member of the 27th Infantry.

Being Gassed Is Worse Than Being Shot, Says This Hero
"Being gassed is worse than being shot," he says, "and shell shock is something terrible."

Private Daily was overcome in the five-day battle in the Argonne sector which was fought by the 27th Infantry and the 33rd Ambulance Corps and had 11 overseas since June. He received only three weeks of training at Camp Meade before sailing.

Daily is an electrician by trade and previous to becoming a soldier made his home with his parents at 227 North Fifty-fourth street.

Private Alexander G. Keller reported as in a hospital, has recovered and is now stationed in the hospital as a drug-giver. In a recent letter to his parents he said: "I guess you think I am wounded, as I am reported in a hospital, but I just had a touch of the 'flu' and am all right now. I consider getting sick a lucky turn, for no sooner was I well than they promoted me to first-class druggist and stationed me here, where I am getting along fine."

Private Keller was drafted last May, just three days after he had graduated from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy.

LUXURY IN TRENCHES ENJOYED BY TEUTONS
Philadelphia Writes Father of Upholstered Furniture and Electric Lights

When the Germans made their luxurious dugouts around St. Mihiel they did not figure on our boys getting into the trench, writes Corporal Samuel J. Jorgenson, Mechanical Repair Shop No. 202, in a letter from Verdun, France, to his father, J. Jorgenson, 231 North Edgewood street.

"One of the most interesting things I have seen was on one of my trips to the front," writes Corporal Jorgenson. "I have always heard about the trenches and dugouts built by the Germans, but I certainly was surprised when I saw them. Believe me, all the credit in the world must be given to the American boys who fought around St. Mihiel, and, in fact, on every front."

"The Yankee troops about St. Mihiel had to advance up a hill for about two miles through barbed wire and machine-gun nests and amid an awful fire from the boche guns on the top of the hill.

"The barbed wire is so thick you could wonder how in the diablo you could ever get through it, and the machine-gun nests are built of concrete with railroad rails as re-enforcement and the trenches are sidewalked with solid stone with cement joints. Some of the dugouts they built are 100 feet deep and the ones occupied by the German officers were furnished with upholstered furniture and equipped with electric lights. They did not figure on the Yankee side, did they?"
